The climate movement is standing up for migrant justice.

People have always moved to build a better life. But, as more communities are forced from their homes by the climate crisis, we must fight for people's right to stay, and ensure safe pathways for those who need to move. There's no climate justice without migrant justice.

For Refugee Week this year, we've organised a series of collaborations between climate and migrant justice groups.

From Greenpeace and Extinction Rebellion to Migrants Organise and Refugee Action, every day this week we'll see climate groups using their social media to promote the vital work migrant justice organisations are doing.

Now more than ever, it's essential to connect our struggles and build solidarity in the fight for intersectional justice. It's up to all of us, so here's what you can do this week:

1) Spread the word by sharing our explainer:

2) Read about the connection between climate and migrant justice:

Why climate justice = migrant justice

3) And follow along with the collaborations by searching for #WeFightTogether on social media!

Please also consider supporting us in the fight for climate and migrant justice!
